

A He is a Lavalette man but he works in Philadelphia.

Now, Mrs. Stevens has gotten all, I think, of these addresses and she has everything down pat and she, of course, will give you every bit of dope and she has a great deal more than I could give you that she has been working on right straight along.

Q After you went to the train, what happened?

A I came back home and our cook, Mrs. Evanson came up that morning about nine o'clock; she always gets there about nine o'clock and she took my wet clothes down in the laundry, where there was a fire - there is one going there all the time on account of the hot water heater, one of these little hot water stoves - and dried them out there, hung them up in the laundry to dry. During the morning she saw me get the fish ready, giving them another washing or drying them or something and getting them ready to take to the Wilsons. After lunch, which Mrs. Evanson procured for me I drove the Wilsons to Point Pleasant.

Q In the Ford?

A In the Ford.

BY MR. PALZER:

Q Before that, Mr. Stevens, if I may interrupt you,